

Barn Morning

Your barn morning is finished, Hicham — the full day-in-the-life on the timeline, about ninety seconds of it. The barn waking in golden light, horses at their stalls, the chestnut groomed and its hoof picked, a stall mucked, your woman working the aisle and the barn dog both in there as real characters, and the leading-out into the flooding doorway that's the heart of it. Fly on the wall, start to finish — nobody looks at the camera, the light moves as the morning goes, and the barn holds cut to cut. I've walked every frame of it myself. One honest thing about the sound rides below.

1. Barn Morning — the film (~90s) (): Your day-in-the-life. Press play and watch it end to end — the barn waking, the horses, your woman working the aisle and the barn dog both in there, and the leading-out into the golden doorway that's the heart of it. Runs about ninety seconds.
2. The cast sheet — the barn, the horses, the hands (): The anchor frames the whole film was built from — the barn itself and every horse and hand that recurs across it, so the world holds cut to cut.
